Distributing Wealth Through Developing, Innovating, and Facilitating a System for the People, by the People

X.MANIFEST

Introduction

From the ashes of the financial crisis of 2008, a new promise emerged: a vision of decentralized and democratized financial and monetary system, aimed at breaking the chains that financial elites had long used to manipulate the masses. Bitcoin and cryptocurrency, with its underlying blockchain technology, held the torch to this promise. Bitcoin failed. Not in its technological marvel, but in its original aim to break away from the corrupt middleman, the banker. Today, Bitcoin is becoming nothing more than a store of value for the elite 1% of the planet, a digital gold for those already dripping in wealth. Alarming, the grip of powerful entities is evident again; with institutions like BlackRock reportedly dominating a significant portion of Bitcoin mining industries. It's as though the transformative potential of cryptocurrency has been quietly ensnared, returning the reins of control back to the very financial elites and bankers who have manipulated economic systems for centuries.

The dream of a decentralized and democratized financial landscape, distribute wealth and power is threatened, appropriated once more by the same serpentine entities that it sought to bypass.

"Give me control of a nation's money and I care not who makes its laws."

- Mayer Amschel Rothschild
